Claim of Increased Salts Content of Colorado River Water Denied, MWD

That use of softened Colorado river water is rapidly increasing in practically all of the fifteen cities and areas now within the Metropolitan Water District, was revealed by water delivery figures released today by Julian Hinds, general manager of the District.

Availability of Colorado River water to the District areas this summer has saved a number of communities from suffering a serious water shortage, Mr. Hinds pointed out. Hot weather during July resulted in new all-time peaks in water deliveries to Southern California cities, and the maximum daily delivery of Colorado river water during July to District areas was 29 percent greater than the maximum daily delivery last July, he stated. In fact, the demand for softened Colorado river water is straining the present capacity of the Metropolitan Water District's softening and filtration plant and construction of a new unit will double the plant's capacity, he is now being rushed forward, Hinds stated.

Three cities in the District are using softened Colorado river water exclusively, it was shown. These are Santa Monica, Santa Ana and Laguna Beach. Pasadena is taking half its water from the aqueduct, Long Beach more than one-third and Beverly Hills about one-half. Other District cities using the aqueduct water are Los Angeles, Glendale, Burbank, Torrance, Compton, Anaheim and Fullerton.

A reported statement of Professor Fritz W. Wentz of the California Institute of Technology, concerning the chemical content of the softened Colorado river water, was challenged by Mr. Hinds.

"In an article appearing in Tuesday's paper, Professor Wentz is reported to have indicated that the softening process increases the salts in the water delivered to consumers," said Mr. Hinds. "This is definitely not true. The softening process used by the Metropolitan Water District does not increase the salts in the water.

"Furthermore, we need not peer into Professor Wentz's test tubes to find out how the softened aqueduct water affects plant growth. Santa Monica has been using this softened water exclusively since June 1941—more than six years—and Santa
